

SEXTANT PEA

Sextant PEA fell 7.1% in Q3 versus +2.9% for its benchmark index. Since the beginning of the year, the fund is down 4.0% while the benchmark is up 5.1%. The breakdown of the fund remains fairly diversified in terms of companies, sectors and regions.

The CAC All Tradable index has been robust this year, thanks to a very positive contribution from large growth stocks in the luxury, energy and aerospace sectors.

The top contributors to Sextant PEA's Q3 performance include two European energy groups, Motor Oil, a Greek refiner that continues to perform well at the operating level, and Saipem (Italy) which is again demonstrated good commercial dynamism. Gruppo Mutuonline continued its run of exceptional performances. These contributions by mid-sized positions were insufficient to offset the setbacks of Q3.

Criteo cost the fund 107bps in Q3. We sold our position following another disappointing results publication. Although the group's offering is excellent, the competitive position is still uncertain in an internet advertising ecosystem largely dominated by the US heavyweight players. Iliad made a negative contribution of almost 1% to the fund in Q3. Its share price has almost halved this year, allowing us to strengthen our position regularly. The telecoms sector has entered a new price war, and Iliad recorded its first net loss of subscribers. Xavier Niel's company enjoyed the status of growth stock and was a favourite with investors. The company has clearly experienced a failed quarter in terms of client recruitment, which is not dramatic at the group level. Investors have turned extremely pessimistic in just three months, even though fundamentals are good or at least hopeful. The deployment of fibre is satisfactory, Iliad will soon stop paying roaming costs to Orange and will then enter the lucrative business market. The entry into the Italian market got off to a very strong start and Iliad will shortly introduce a new box that promises to be very innovative. In fact, high expectations for this box are one reason for poor recruitment numbers in fixed line.

Derichebourg's share price has tumbled this year. Results have been good and the company has stepped up investments, but the small cap / cyclical combination has been shunned since the summer. The company is considerably less cyclical than in the past, no longer has debt, and is very well-placed to make acquisitions in a cyclical trough if the economy sinks into recession. The valuation is again close to capital employed and we have rebuilt our positions of 2016.

Other heavy fallers included Vipshop, a Chinese private-sales retailer which is struggling like its French competitor Showroomprivé. Both of these have strong positions in a competitive market and could become acquisition targets for traditional retail players.

Sextant PEA's main position is now Iliad. The second largest position is Vivendi, which remains a high-conviction investment despite a somewhat confused situation in the Bolloré orbit. We remain convinced that the market greatly under-estimates the value of its music division (Universal Music). Solocal is the fund's third position: the company is in full recovery, energetically driven by CEO Eric Boustouller who has positioned it as the digital partner of very small to mid-sized companies. TripAdvisor remains in the Top 5. The metrics of this global brand improve quarter after quarter in terms of visibility and usage, but monetisation of its services is still far from optimal. TripAdvisor hopes to migrate to the social networks, and could thus become an ideal target for the sector heavyweights.
